

Northern Dalmatia is the lesser known stretch of Croatia's Adriatic coast. Its centrepiece is the port of Zadar, with as much Roman, Byzantine and Venetian history as the more familiar hubs of Split and Dubrovnik. Encircled by Venetian fortifications, part of the old Roman Forum forms the focus of the city. On the north shore the sea organ emits unworldly tones through holes bored into the smooth new paving, their size and velocity played by the waves of the sea.

Split, the second largest city of Croatia (circa.420, 000 inhabitants) is an important port and a major cultural, tourist, industrial and sports centre in the middle of the Dalmatian coast. The focus of the city falls on the adjoining hubs of the palm lined Adriatic promenade called the Riva and Diocletian's Roman Palace. Four gates guard its entrances, Gold, Silver, Iron and Bronze. Amid the narrow streets and alleyways there are two outstanding landmarks – the courtyard of the Perestil and the Cathedral of Sveti Duje.
